Not as illustrated. See images below. Erich Segal reads his novel "The Class" said to be his best. It refers to the Harvard Class of 1958 of which Segal was a member. It is the story of a generation - the saga of five extraordinary of the class: their ambitions, their achievements, and their tragedies in the turbulent quarter-century since their graduation. It culminates with a dramatic twenty-fifth reunion where each confront not only his classmates but what has become of his own life.
