Some Days Are Better Than Others Samuel Sherrill

The story begins with the sudden and unexpected murder of Jack Carter. While never legally solved, decades later rough justice is imposed on those responsible when they die in ways they never saw coming. The origin of this story starts with an intense competition in senior high school between two young men, Ray and Chip, for one young beautiful woman, Ginny. Chip is rejected when it becomes clear Ray and Ginny love one another. Ray and Ginny have that first special and surprisingly erotic night together and later marry. Chip at first seeks revenge but then finds a young woman who turns his life around. Their lives together look promising until a tragedy takes her away. Reverting to his predatory ways in both sex and business Chip gets one more chance but he is wrongly blamed for an attack on the woman he was falling in love with. Ray's friend, Jack, seems to have uncovered a secret Chip does not want revealed. He feels he must stop Jack from speaking out. Past conflicts and ongoing misunderstandings culminate in Jack's murder and consequences for Chip that seem at once both just and unjust. The love/hate story of Ray, Ginny, Jack, and Chip are intertwined and arise out of family history, love, hatred, willful misperceptions, and the need for revenge. Overall the story reveals how our loves and hatreds are played out in the gray zone of life.
