Murder Run-Around John D. MacDonald

John D. MacDonald (1916 – 1986) was a prolific American writer of crime and suspense novels as well as short stories, many of them set in his adopted home of Florida. His best-known works include the popular and critically acclaimed Travis McGee series, and his novel "The Executioners," which was adapted into the film "Cape Fear." In 1972, MacDonald was named a grandmaster of the Mystery Writers of America, and he won a 1980 U.S. National Book Award in the one-year category Mystery.

MacDonald's literary career began in 1945 when, while in military service, he wrote a short story and mailed it home to his wife who first submitted it to "Esquire" magazine, where it was rejected, and then submitted to "Story" magazine, where it was accepted for $25.00. After his discharge from service, he continued to write short stories that kept being rejected until a sale to Dime Detective set his career in motion. He ended up selling close to 500 stories to the detective, mystery, adventure, sports, western and science fiction pulps. With the boom of paperback novels, MacDonald successfully made the jump to longer fiction with his first novel, The Brass Cupcake. After a couple of years, and for almost a decade, MacDonald focused on writing crime thrillers, many of which are now considered masterpieces of the hardboiled genre.

Although the McGee novels are what MacDonald is best known for, his stories from the '40s and '50s represent probably his best work. "Murder Run-Around" is from the September 1949 issue of "Dime Detective Tales," the most successful of Popular Publication's "Detective" magazines and one of its longest surviving titles. It ran for 274 issues from November 1931 to August 1953, mostly as a monthly.
